Battery backup? Wall exit? For test purposes - I would connect it directly on the wall and see what happens. What's more - are a lot of your failures happening on Windows login screen? 0 I guess I can run the checkdisk, but I don't have a large amount of faith that will fix the problem, but can't hurt now the machine is connected in the wall outlet, the accidents really just seem to come from kodi / chrome / firefox, but it may be other applications, about the only other thing I have in it is my games and launch box, but being a lemon now, don't have been a game... The PC will boot well after waiting a few minutes or so, usually the only time it hangs on startup is when I had as 3 or 4 breaks in a row, so it won't boot for minutes of a few, I let it sit and then it will boot well. But when I get hung on startup, it will load the BIOS flash page, then enter a blank/black screen... So there is... 0 then if chkdsk find an error that is usually a good fix so your PC boots you can use the task manager and disable everything that loads on startup as see if it helps every time I fix a PC can take a lot of time and patience in a lot of fixes. Did you say you were able to boot it in safe mode? also disable automatic restart configuration as you can make your system stop on a useful ms information screen? 0 The PC will rip out well, but sometimes it will me Abnat. m @Abnat uE. raduja edop essi es rev arap elttis me kskkic rerric uoV ... euq moc jAtse euq o etrec oEAn. SOIB %Apa disable auto reboot feature, and here is where I can now see the PC getting hung/frozen. I am not receiving any BSOD, and is not creating and dumping logs on these accidents, but is just freezing when. I'm not sure how I can record these freezes for log analysis though. 0 Is your BIOS the most current for your motherboard? Page 8 Yeah. I updated that this weekend, too, did not make any difference. Ran sfc /scannow, nothing wrong there. Now I can just get into firefox, load a youtube video and within 15 minutes the PC will shut down completely. Nothing really significant in the Windows event log and zero dump files are created in a reboot. I'll try to figure out how to run a memtest for at least 12 hours and see if I have some mistakes. What's your ram's tension? Giving him a notch could be the answer. If you hit RAM tension doesn't help, waiting and getting a good boot tells me something. First it would be power supply. But since that doesn't seem to be, I'm wondering if the motherboard is failing here. Generally, a computer does not go for a straight power reboot unless there is a power delivery problem somewhere (even a memory problem usually gives you a blue screen at least some of the time). What version of the memtest you used, and you checked the SMART of the ssd (which model is)? I'm sorry if I lost this if I've been told. I would try a recent version of the UEFI memtest free of note, version 7.5 or higher. Based on the crash report you posted, try going to C:\ProgramData\Microsoft\Crypto\RSA\MachineKeys or the drive letter for which any drive your operating system is connected. If you have not checked viewing hidden items, do so, so you can see the prog data folder. If you see a local service there under machine keys, change permissions to modify and write. If the control is checked, turn it off. I ran about 15 passes with memtest86, but can only run 4 passes a race.
